AN UNWARRANTED PROMISE.

THE REPUBLICANS of Maine evidently do not believe in merely endorsing their party platform and proceeding with nominations. They held their state convention after the Chicago convention had concluded its The Chicago platform was endorsed true enough, but the Maine politicians set up a little platform of their own. In it we find this rather surprising plank:

"It (the Republican party) has maintained, so far as is practicable, a condition of peace in the Philippine Islands, has gradually introduced good government there, has fostered public schools and public improvements, and in due time will, as predicted by ex-Secretary Root in his speech to the Chicago convention, follow the same pelicy in these islands that has been followed in Cuba."

The difficulty about ginseng is that it grows very slowly, years being required to grow a marketable crop. It is not likely that the industry will be generally undertaken here, in spite of No man can afford to drink excervethe alluring $32,000 profit reported from ly. Why? Because of the example.

A MARKED DIFFERENCE,

AN EASTERN EXCHANGE of recent date contains a letter from an American who ought to know bet ter, in which surprise is expressed that there should be any adverse criticism of the prominent part taken in politics by the highest of our government officials. This American calls attention to the political parts played by memhers of the British cabinet and declares that the people over there would consider them recreant to their trust if they failed to be prominent in every parliamentary campaign. And the Chicago platform does not warrant the Republicans of Maine in saying that the same policy will be pursued in Cuba.

It will be Eard to convince some people that the young man was not tired of his job; that he was actuated in letting go simply by a stern sense of duty. But whatever the real cause we have no right to go behind the face of the returns. The young man let himself out because he was twenty minseng root. the British government. Should an adverse majority be elected to the louds the ministry, if it followed precedent, would resign, and a new cabinet. Would be formed, a cabinet whose members were in accord with the commons majority.

True, the House of Lords has the power to prevent, or at least to kill, legislation enacted by the commons, but it is a power that is very rarely exercised. And the king may veto acts passed by both commons and Lords, but not for a great many years has the veto been used, and it is doubtful if it ever will be. The political existence of British cabinets depends therefore, on the complexion of the house of commons. They must work to look their majorities or go out of office.

In this country cabinets do not resign when the lower house of congress is politically opposed to them. It is not at all unusual for the house to be of one political complexion and the president of another. Once a Republican control and in the president of another. Once a Republican when the lower house of congress is politically opposed to them. It is not at all unusual for the house to be of one political complexion and the president of another. Once a Republican when the lower house is not at all unusual for the house to be of one political complexion and the president was in office when both house and senate were Democratic. Fresident Roosevelt believes he ought to campaign for the Republican party. He will be in personal charge this year and his cabinet officers have already been notified that they must take the stump.

Nevertheless, the president and his official family are paid by the whole people. It is their duty to stay at home and attend to business instead of devoting their entire time to politics, as they are doing and will do from now until the votes are counted next. November.

for on the theory that the Maine Republicans consider their own declarations as of more importance than the declarations of their national convention. There is nothing in the Chicago platform that can possibly be tortured into a declaration that the Philippines will ultimately be given their independence. The striking feature of the Philippines plank adopted by the National Republican convention is its boast that the Republicans of those shands the largest civil liberty than ever before But they have been given their inderdegree of civil liberty than ever before But they have been given their independence of civil liberty than ever before But they have been given their independence of civil liberty than ever before at the man whose wagon is in the mud, grateful to the philanthropist who helps him to extricate one wheel, but as far from being able too go forward as when all four wheels were stuck. More ingenious sophistry was never uttered. No man can afford to gamble. No man can afford to gamble. No man can afford to drink excervely. Why? Because of the example. Because the good fellow who actually can afford the outlay in money, if he cannot afford, the outlay in vitality, encourages by his example someone who cannot afford to spend the money, someone whose constitution will not stand the strain.

And in closing it is proper to say just a word to the employers who decree that the men who work for them must neither drink nor gamble. Wouldn't it be a good idea to cut out the drinking and gambling you yourselves are doing?
